7. Definition of planned obsolescence: A manufacturing decision by a company to make consumer products in such a way that they become out-of-date or useless within a known time period. The main goal of this type of production is to ensure that consumers will have to buy the product multiple times, rather than only once. This naturally stimulates demand for an industry's products because consumers have to keep coming back again and again. Products ranging from inexpensive light bulbs to high-priced goods such as cars and buildings are subject to planned obsolescence by manufacturers and producers. Also known as "built-in obsolescence." The expression originated in British coal mining where a major danger is the presence of carbon monoxide and methane, odourless gases that are not readily detectable by humans but are lethal in an enclosed space. Canaries are much more sensitive to these gases. Until 1987, British miners brought a caged canary with them when exploring new areas of the mine. If the canary died, they knew that the air supply was not safe, so they evacuated the area immediately.
